Excerpt: .and the ten good miles besides, that you walked the other day, you might be able to walk to Dunmoor school. It is not far, if you were only stronger. Oh, Archie was strong; quite strong enough for that, if only his aunt and Liliass thought so; and maybe they might, if John would speak to them about it. And so it was arranged; and when John went back to college and the Gordon boys went home, Archie found himself at David Graham s side, under the firm and not ungentle rule of the Dunmoor parish schoolmaster. Liliass joy was scarcely less than his own; and the delight of welcoming him home at night quite repaid her for his absence during the day. As for her, she began again the business of teaching with wonderful cheerfulness, and went on with wonderful success. Mrs. Blair s office of schoolmistress was becoming her s only in name, she declared; for Liliass did all that was to be done, while she sat quietly in her arm-chair, knitting or sewing, only now and then administering a word of caution or reproof to the little ones about her. The children loved their young teacher dearly. Not one of them but would have travelled miles to do her a pleasure; and over two or three her influence for good was very easily seen. When the summer and autumn work was fairly over, Elsie Ray came back again to the school; and...
